

AGRICULTURAL FAIR

Will Surpass Any Before Held In the County

BALL GAMES AND RACES

Will Be Main Attractions—Children's Day Will Be New Feature—Excellent Free Amusements.

The Board of Directors of the Bedford County Fair are working hard on the arrangements for the coming fair which is but four weeks away.

All free attractions have been arranged for and the program is near completion. The Association is spending more money this year than ever before for free attractions and the contract calls for the best that money can buy. The services of three amusement companies have been secured for each day and will give all performances near the grandstand.

Four games of baseball have been arranged, a game each day, beginning with Tuesday. This program will be announced later.

A new feature has been added this year in the way of a "Special Day" for Children—Wednesday will be "Children's Day" and all children in Bedford County under the age of 12 years will be admitted free. Special attractions have been secured for this day and everything will be done by the management to amuse the children.

All school teachers of the county are requested to write the Secretary, J. Roy Cessna, and tell him how many children's tickets they wish for distribution in their schools and he will send the number of tickets desired.

The race program has been completed. Larger purses are offered this year than ever offered before and some of the best horses in the state are expected to be entered in the races. The race program will be published in next week's papers.

Information received from all parts of the county lead the directors to believe that the exhibits in all departments will be larger than ever. The premium list is now on press and will be ready for distribution at an early date. This year's list has been revised in all departments and larger premiums are being paid.

Let everybody work together for the success of the fair. Look around and see if you do not have something that you think worth being put on exhibition this year. Help make the Fair of '11 the best ever held in this county.

Mrs. Mary J. Mock

Mrs. Mary J., widow of John Mock, died Saturday, August 19, at her home at Centreville, aged 85 years, four months and eight days. She was the last of the Arthur Rose family. Her husband died many years ago. The following children survive: Allen P. of Bedford Township, Daniel of Centreville, Henry of Altoona, Espy A. of the Baltimore Pike, east of Cumberland, Md.; Mrs. Martha J. Oster of Flintstone, Md.; Mrs. Emma Beck of Pleasant Valley, Mrs. Tillie Boward of Cumberland, Md.; Mrs. Francis Cessna and Mrs. Hettie Hale, of Fostoria, O. There has never been a death of any of the children in this remarkable family.

The funeral services were held Monday, August 21, conducted by Rev. Clift. Interment was made in the Bortz Lutheran Cemetery.

Mrs. A. I. Lyon

Margaret Priscilla, wife of Augustus I. Lyon, died at their home in this borough on Friday, the 18th instant, aged 63 years. Their marriage took place in 1867.

Mrs. Lyon was born in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., at Rosemont, the estate of her grand-uncle, Jessie Comegys. She was the daughter of Jacob W. and Sarah Comegys Graflin, of Baltimore.

Her remains were interred in London Park Cemetery, Baltimore, beside those of her eldest son and among her kindred, of whom eight generations lie buried beneath Maryland soil.

Mrs. Lyon was an absolutely unselfish woman. Her gentle, kindly nature drew to her hosts of friends and she died universally beloved.

Diehl Reunion

The Diehl reunion will be held at the Fair Ground Thursday, August 31. Addresses will be made by Howard Cessna, Esq., Rev. J. C. Knable and others. A game of ball will be played between Bedford and Wolfburg. Everybody is cordially invited to come and bring well filled baskets.

BEDFORD DEFEATED

Last Friday by Cumberland Collegians by the Score of 6-4.

Last Friday in a closely fought game the home team bowed their heads in defeat before the Cumberland Collegians. Every person who witnessed the game, however, knows that the visitors did not have a walk-over by any means and it was only by the slightest margin (a long drive to center field that was misjudged by about four inches) that the home team lost the game. Allen's work, both in the field and at the plate, was all that could be expected of any ball player. Pitcher Leasure was up to his usual form and pitched a fine game, striking out 11 men and allowing only six hits.

A Statement to the Public

The fact has been published in certain papers that I was arrested on three criminal warrants charging me with "assault and battery with intent to kill, perjury and criminal conspiracy."

My position as a minister of the gospel makes it needful to say that my entire connection with the matter was this:

On Saturday, August 12, I went before Justice Mort of Springfield Township, Huntingdon County, and swore out a warrant against certain parties for making threats to do me harm in person or estate and that I believed that because of these threats my person or estate was in danger.

Justice Mort issued warrants and gave them to a well known constable who made the arrests and brought the parties before the Justice. One of them refused to give bail either for a hearing or for appearance at court.

Commitment papers were issued; resistance was offered but the officer took his man before Justice Waite at Three Springs where he gave bail for his appearance at court. He then swore out these warrants against me though I had no part in the alleged "assault and battery" except the getting out of the warrant.

USEFUL ABOUT THE HOUSE ROOM THAT IS SOUND-PROOF

Ammonia Cleans Clothing and Paint and is Good for Numerous Other Purposes.

In housekeeping ammonia has many uses. It is an efficient help about the wardrobe. Black material, sponged with a cupful of water in which a teaspoonful of ammonia has been mixed, will renew its freshness, while black silk will lose its objectionable shininess by such a sponging. A little ammonia will remove grease from collars, and when rubbed over corsets will cleanse them to a nicety. When mixed with equal parts of turpentine, ammonia will remove paint stains from cloth. If the paint is stubborn it may require several applications before the work is done. Persevere. Nothing is so good for boys' tweed suits as to sponge them with the ammonia mixture. For toilet use, a small quantity will soften the water in which the hair is washed and aid in cleansing the scalp. It renders the bath delightful, and carpets, when thoroughly gone over with ammonia and water, are surprisingly restored to something like their original freshness. When mixed with a white wax and turpentine it makes the best of polishes for the floor. To relieve the pain and prevent inflammation resulting from the bites and stings of summer insects ammonia ranks first as a cure.

CATARRH GOES

So Does Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Croup and Asthma.

You can easily tell by reading the symptoms below, whether you have catarrh or not.

Offensive breath, frequent sneezing, discharge from the nose, stoppage of the nose, huskiness of the voice, tickling in throat, droppings in throat, a cough, pain in chest, loss of strength, variable appetite, spasms of coughing, low spirited at times, raising of mucus, difficulty in breathing, loss of vital force.

F. W. Jordan has a sensible remedy (money back if it fails) for catarrh, called HYOMEL (pronounced High-o-mel) which is a vaporized air, so antiseptic, that when it is breathed over the inflamed and germ-infested membrane, it kills all germ life, gives relief in two minutes and cures catarrh.

The price, including hard rubber pocket inhaler, is only $1.00. The inhaler will last a lifetime, so that should you need a second bottle of HYOMEL, you can get it for 50 cents.

Walnut Grove Campmeeting

The Walnut Grove Campmeeting closed Sunday evening. Copious showers of rain during the day laid the dust and made the closing walk pleasant. A large number of persons took part in this closing service. The services of the day were largely attended. The boarding house served 763 meals on Sunday.

Monday, August 7, the association elected all its former officers with the exception of Rev. J. M. Waggoner, trustee. By the peace agreement, signed July 6, whereby all difficulties and disputes were to be adjusted and settled, the council of the church of Walnut Grove was to nominate one trustee. The church council failed to send in a nomination, and the term of office of Rev. J. M. Waggoner was extended until his successor will be elected which will occur soon after the nomination is sent in. On August 12 the association adopted an action in regard to the disputed entrance gate which was to enter the ground. The Camp Association agrees to put the entrance gate any place the church council may designate.

The camp was the "banner camp" in many ways. It had the largest attendance, the best order and the best attendance at the services of any campmeeting.

Napoleon Suppressed "Julius Caesar." Bonaparte was one night at the play in Paris, and it happened to be "Julius Caesar." Talma performed the part of Brutus, and when he knelt to Caesar and said, "Give us back our liberties," the acclamations all over the house were so great that nothing could be heard on the stage for many minutes. Bonaparte meanwhile was taking snuff in his most violent way, which he always did when agitated. The next day he sent orders that that play was not to be acted any more.—Journal of the Hon. Remarkable Chamber at University of Utrecht That Was Constructed for Scientific Experiments.

The Physiological Institute of the University of Utrecht possesses one of the most remarkable rooms in the world, a chamber about seven and a half feet square, which is said to be absolutely noiseless, as far as the entrance of sounds from outside is concerned.

This room is situated on the top story of a laboratory building, and is an inside room, but so arranged that it can be ventilated and inundated with sunshin. The walls, floors and ceiling each consist of half a dozen layers of different substances, with air spaces and interstices filled with sound-deadening materials.

Some persons when in the room experience a peculiar sensation in the ears. While every effort has been made to exclude sounds that are not wanted, of course the object of constructing this singular room was to experiment with phenomena connected with sound. Some of the sounds employed are made in the room itself; others are introduced from outside by means of a copper tube, which is plugged with lead when not in use.

Bees Recognize Man as Friend.

Charles Potchenick, employed by the Maverick sparries near San Antonio, Tex., has unusual control over bees. He handles them with as much ease as one would in playing with kittens or a harmless pet. While working with them he goes bareheaded and barefaced and pays no attention to the insects as they crawl over his exposed hands and arms or pile up in great clumps on his face. Recently he had a picture taken holding a small limb in his teeth on which a swarm had settled. The bees formed a kind of long beard hanging below his waist and his entire face was covered with those that crawled from the limb. Old bee keepers say that his feats in handling bees are the most remarkable in the world. He claims that he has not been stung in two years.

"Muriel," he exclaimed, waking the night owl from its slumbers, "I cannot understand what you see in me to love!"

The night owl booted in disgust, and went to sleep again. Even Muriel, as her soft eyes dwelt upon the planet Venus, looked a little disappointed. But she knew he was too earnest to be fishing for a compliment, and she pressed his hand as she dreamily replied:

The Cardinal's Edict

It Was but Lamely Enforced Till an Example Was Set

By F. A. MITCHEL

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Cardinal Richelieu while prime minister was virtually king of France. During his administration dueling became so common among the higher classes, especially the officers of the army, that it was evident if the practice were not checked these two classes would become depleted. The cardinal issued an order against such fighting, but it was not obeyed. In order to show that he was in earnest in the matter he made an example of the Count de Bouteville, a member of the exalted house of Montmorency, who had disobeyed the edict. The count was beheaded. This had a wholesome effect, but not sufficient to eradicate the evil.

There was at this time a young lieutenant in the army, Jean de la Tour, married to Yvon, a lovely young woman of twenty-four, who had borne him two children. Jean was a poor swordsman, and his wife realized that if compelled to fight according to the code she would probably lose him. She urged him to practice, and when he excused himself on the ground that he had no one to fence with she offered to be his opponent.

Jean was much pleased at the idea, and his wife at once procured a suitable costume. She was about the same height and weight as her husband, and it was apparent from the first that she would make a very suitable adversary for practice purposes. While De la Tour was naturally sluggish in his movements, madame was remarkably quick. He started in as her instructor, but it was not long before he was worsted by his pupil.

But Yvon knew very well that she was not capable of bringing him up to a standard that would make him a match for accomplished swordsmen. Unknown to her husband, she took lessons of the most skillful fencing master in Paris, pledging him to keep the matter a secret. He had good reason to observe his pledge, for his pupil soon became more proficient in his art than himself.

The inevitable was not long in coming. Jean de la Tour one day, during drill, stepped in a puddle of water and bespattered a comrade's newly polished boots. Yvon was in her chamber, engaged with her maternal duties, when an officer called and asked for her husband. She told her caller that Jean was not at home, and the officer left with her a challenge for him from Lieutenant Jacques de Fontayne to mortal combat for having bespattered his boots. Madame promised to deliver the message, and the officer withdrew.

When De la Tour returned to his quarters his wife asked him to drive with her to their country place near Paris to assist her in laying out some changes she wished to make. Jean consented, and the two drove to a house and grounds near St. Cloud. Jean was surprised to see several servants there, including Francois, whom his wife had brought with her from her own family when she was married. Yvon took her husband to a room on the top story, with but one window near the ceiling, and, while telling him of the change she proposed to make in it, suddenly stepped into the hall. Jean heard the key turned in the door and his wife going down the staircase. He was a prisoner.

In a few minutes Francois came up and told his master that Mme. de la Tour desired that her husband should remain in seclusion for a few days, and she hoped he would not worry. He would be given whatever he wished for. De la Tour, at a loss to know the cause of his imprisonment, was thunderstruck.

Mme. de la Tour, returning to Paris, sent word in the name of her husband that in view of the cardinal's order he would only meet Lieutenant de Fontayne on the promise of all concerned not to divulge the affair and would insist on fighting masked.

A reply came consenting to the terms and asking that De la Tour would name his seconds in order that the terms might be agreed upon. In reply to this word was sent that De la Tour, fearing a second might betray him to the prime minister, would trust no one with his interests. He would appear at dawn the next morning at the village of V., a few miles from Paris, ready to fight De Fontayne with rapiers. The reason given for this unusual course was that De la Tour was more afraid of losing his life by the cardinal's ax than De Fontayne's sword. An assent to this was received by Mme. de la Tour, and the preliminaries were closed.

The next morning Yvon, dressed in a suit of clothes belonging to her husband, was driven to V., arriving on the ground just as day was breaking. She found not only De Fontayne, but two seconds attending him.

"Pardon, monsieur," said one of these men, "but it is not usual for affairs like this to be fought out alone by the principals. Since you have no seconds, in case you disable Lieutenant de Fontayne it is expected that you will fight with me, and if you disable me you will have to fight my confere."

Yvon, not daring to speak lest her voice betray her, simply nodded an assent. She wore her husband's rapier at her side and, drawing it, put herself in a position of defense.

Now, Mme. de la Tour, though she expected to meet skillful swordsmen, knew that if she showed her own proficiency she would give herself away, for these men all knew that De la Tour was a bungler. Being a woman, at first her nerve failed her, and she came very near losing her life by a single thrust of her adversary. The thought of her two innocent children, who would be rendered motherless if she did not control herself, made her perfectly cool, and, though she did not do what she was capable of doing, she did all that was necessary. She dreaded killing her adversary or even wounding him. She therefore sent his weapon flying in the air.

De Fontayne picked it up with the intention of continuing the fight, but his second interfered, claiming that it was not now his part to fight. By this time Yvon's nerve was as steady as a rock. She pinked her adversary, though unintentionally, then disarmed him. The third man she served as she had served the first. Then she strode away to her carriage without turning back for a glance at the three men, who stood looking at one another and heif in astonishment.

But madame did not have a chance to mount the steps of the carriage the footman had let down for her. The sound of horses' hoofs was heard, and an officer, followed by a dozen horsemen, rode up.

"By order of his eminence the prime minister," he said, "I arrest you all and am ordered to conduct you to the Palais Cardinal."

The affair had got out at the barracks, some one wishing to curry favor with the man who ruled France having peached. Yvon was permitted to ride back to Paris in her carriage, the others on horseback, all surrounded by guards. At the Palais Cardinal they were obliged to wait several hours before the minister was ready to receive them; then when they were admitted to his presence by the thunderclap on his face they saw their doom. Yvon had worn her mask up to this moment. The cardinal saw it and said with icy sarcasm:

"Lieutenant de la Tour, you remind me of the ostrich, which hides his head in the sand to conceal its body. Your head will look better till I am through with it uncovered. You will oblige me by removing your mask."

"Pardon, your eminence," interposed De Fontayne. "I doubt if he is De la Tour. This one is a marvel with the rapier; De la Tour is an indifferent fencer. This one disarmed us all in turn."

"We have need of such men," said the cardinal to Yvon. "You would be better employed in my service. I would see you fence with Carrier. If you can disarm Carrier you will save your head. Unmask!"

"If I unmask, your eminence, I cannot fight."

"Not fight unmasked! Well, then, wait till you have fought."

Carrier was one of those picked men the cardinal kept about him for protection and a marvel with the rapier. The two were given foils, this being a great advantage to Yvon, who dreaded bloodshed. For awhile it was a drawn game between the two, but finally, by one of those quick moves that only a gift nerve, so to speak, can accomplish, Yvon placed the button of her foil against her adversary's heart.

"Enough!" cried the cardinal. "Victor, unmask!"

Yvon took off her face covering, and in doing so her hair, which had in so many frays become unloosened, fell on her shoulders.

"A woman!" exclaimed Richelieu, astonished.

"A woman, your excellency," she replied. "The wife of Lieutenant de la Tour."

"Your husband! Where is he?"

"Shut up in our country place. I tricked him. Knowing of your eminence's edict against men fighting duels, I determined to fight in his place. Surely the order does not apply to women."

"You are very shrewd," said his eminence dryly.

At this point an attendant announced to the cardinal that Lieutenant de la Tour was without and begged to be admitted. The request was granted, and De la Tour, very hot and very red and very angry, entered. He looked at everybody, finally fixing his eyes on his wife. Then he turned to the cardinal.

"I have heard, your eminence, that my wife has been fighting in my stead and that the party was brought here by your eminence's order. Meanwhile I have been shut up like a dog and have just escaped."

"Your wife has saved you first from a better swordsman and second from my headman." Then turning to Yvon: "Mme. de la Tour, her majesty has graciously appointed you her mistress of the robes. By your pluck and skill you have saved every one of these men, including your husband, from the block."

Then Yvon approached her husband shamefacedly, hung her head and glanced up at him appealingly. He half turned away from her with folded arms, tapping one arm with his fingers.

"You have made me ridiculous," he muttered.

"I would," interposed the cardinal, "that every woman in France would make her husband thus ridiculous. To show you and others that she has benefited you the king promotes you to be captain."

Then Jean embraced his wife. It has been claimed that the reform the cardinal was so desirous of making really began from that time. Be that as it may, Captain and Mme. de la Tour always stood high in his eminence's favor.

Aids Nature

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not the profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

A STRONG STATEMENT

A Great Specialist and Philanthropist Proposes to Decrease the Death Rate in This Community OVER FIFTY PER CENT.

In a recent interview with Dr. Daniel G. Carey, the famous specialist and founder of Dr. Carey's MARSH ROOT, this great scientist and philanthropist stated, "I will agree to reduce the death rate of any community at least fifty per cent., if the good people will take my medicines as I direct them. I know what my medicines will do and I would be willing to forfeit my entire possessions if I failed to accomplish this result. I do not say this in a spirit of egotism, or boasting, but it is a fact that during the past years of my practice, I have doctored and have saved more people than any ten physicians in this part of the country." I have had more obstinate cases, as they have come to me as a "last resort" many times and in the treatment of these cases I have used almost exclusively my MARSH ROOT, or one of my HIT PRESCRIPTIONS and with such wonderful results that I feel it my duty to humanity to arrange so that the world at large may get the benefit of these life saving formulae." Read what MARSH ROOT has done for this lady.

The following is a statement from Mrs. Welch, No. 414 Carroll Street, Elmira, N. Y., in regard to her daughter's condition, Miss Nellie K. Welch.

On my daughter's return from school in October, 1906, she complained of being sick. She at once went to bed. She got so bad that I became frightened and sent for a physician. He diagnosed the case and pronounced it Diabetes, and at once put her under a course of treatment, which proved of no avail. At the expiration of five months, she was so bad that she could not leave her bed. At a council of physicians, it was decided that there was no help for her, and that she could not live. It may seem strange we thought of everything, as one will at a time of this kind, and, knowing of a party who had taken Dr. Carey's Marsh Root, called on them to see if they derived any benefit. Through their suggestion we purchased a bottle of Dr. Carey's Marsh Root. She used at least six bottles, and at once became relieved. We are now willing to make sworn affidavit to the fact that she is entirely cured. She is a girl of eighteen and works every day. We would be pleased to answer any communication in regard to this case, and cannot say too much for Dr. Carey's Marsh Root Kidney and Bladder Remedy. (Signed) JENNIE E. WELCH.

Sherbet at Its Best.

A sherbet made of extract of violets was much esteemed in the east, and Mohammed is reported to have said of it that it surpassed all other extracts. In some part of Europe it is customary to mingle violets, roses, and lime blossoms with preserves to add a flower element to the fruity flavor. In Egypt and Turkey violets are used in making sherbets as what is employed in Juleps in Kentucky.

THERE THE SAUSAGE IS HOLY

Highest Aim of Good German is to Evolve a New Brand of "Wurst."

While in this country one may purchase many varieties of sausage, it is to Westphalia, Prussia, that we must look for the sausage in all its glory, says Harper's Weekly. There, it is said, a trader will name you no fewer than four hundred different kinds, and they present a bewildering array of diverse substances in their composition.

At a German sausage exhibition held not so long ago at Berne, in Switzerland, there were displayed 1,785 kinds of sausage from various countries. It is said that a good German would rather invent a new sausage than anything else. At any rate there is told the story of the young Prussian who, though he had received an expensive training as a chemist, shut himself up in his laboratory and, instead of devising a new dye, safety match, motor engine, explosive, aeroplane or photographic lens, took pork, veal, olives, pepper, fennel, old wine, cheese, apples, cinnamon and herring's roes, and from them evolved a wonderful and totally original "wurst," the best of its kind. He has amassed a considerable fortune from its sale.

MORE EVIDENCE

It is Coming in Rapidly in Bedford.

Evidence on the following subject will prove of interest to every Bedford reader. So many people go through the same experience daily. This public statement should be proof positive to every wavering doubter. Read it carefully.

Mrs. Martha Davidson, 357 W. Pitt Street, Bedford, Pa., says: "I was in poor health and I now feel certain that my condition was due to disordered kidneys. I was subject to nervous spells and headaches and there was a constant, dull ache in the small of my back. The least work tired me and I felt miserable in every way when I happened to see Doan's Kidney Pills advertised. I procured a box at John R. Dull's Drug Store and they acted just as represented, bringing prompt and effective relief. I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a most reliable kidney medicine." (Statement given October 14, 1907.)

A Permanent Cure

When Mrs. Davidson was interviewed on November 13, 1909, she added: "I still have unlimited confidence in Doan's Kidney Pills and I am willing to again recommend them. The relief they gave me has been permanent."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Cats That Coo.

Another New Jersey genius has turned his attention to the conservation of the energy lost in cat yowls. The backyard concert is not only a wanton waste of power, but murders sleep. Experts have discovered that by transplanting the vocal chords of a dove into the throat of a loud-mouthed Tomcat the backyard nightly concert is transformed into a lullaby of inspiring sweetness that coaxes sleep to the weary eyes of the most inveterate insomniac or poker player. The cooing cat has come to stay.

FRIDAY MORNING, AUG. 25, 1911

THE FUSION MOVEMENT

The movement on the part of the representatives of the Democratic, Keystone and Prohibition parties to put a fusion ticket in the field will, we believe, work out in such a way as to result in victory at the polls, though when the present primaries act was formed it was thought by the Penrose machine that it would put an end to fusion movements.

The plan now agreed upon, depending upon certain conditions, gives to the Democrats the nominees for all the offices for which Democrats had, at the time, announced themselves, including County Treasurer, two County Commissioners, one Director of Poor, one County Auditor, Coroner and County Surveyor; the Keystoneers are to get Prothonotary, Sheriff, District Attorney and one County Auditor; the Prohibitions are to get Register and Recorder and a Director of the Poor.

This division should be satisfactory to the Democrats in view of the fact that no announcements were made by Democrats for the places allotted to the other two parties.

If the three tickets can be made identical, success is in sight, and it now looks as though such an arrangement can be made. It will require all candidates to file three papers, one for each party. It will also require each candidate to file with the chairman of his party a withdrawal to be used in case he does not secure the necessary plurality vote on the three tickets. Unless this is done the fusion movement cannot be carried to a successful conclusion.

The above, in brief, is the plan that was adopted, and it is hoped that all the candidates will assent to it, so that no contentions nor discords may arise while the battle is being waged to defeat the local annex of the Penrose machine.

It is a cardinal principle of Democracy that the majority shall rule, and it is to be hoped that those candidates who fall short when the primary vote is counted will continue to serve their party by supporting the ticket.

THE CLOSING SCENES

Perhaps the most important incident of the last day of the special session of Congress, the work of which has been reported from time to time, was the President's veto of the bill to revise the wool schedule, his reasons being along the same line as those which killed the wool and free list bills.

In response to a statement by Representative Fitzgerald of New York, showing the remarkable record of economy of the session in the House, "Uncle Joe" Cannon proceeded to belittle the Democratic economy, which he brought to the floor Representative Palmer of Pennsylvania, who said:

"Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of amazement to me that a member of this House so distinguished as the former Speaker and so long in service could crowd into ten minutes of talk so many inaccuracies of statement as the gentleman from Illinois has made here this afternoon. I want to say that if the $220,000 which we have saved to the public treasury in the organization and operation of this House were the extent of the Democratic program for economy in governmental expenditures, I would be ashamed of it. But I want to call attention to the fact that that saving, small as it is, is about 25 per cent. of the total expense of the operation of this House, and resulted from taking out nothing which was necessary, but only those places which were put in here as the pettiest graft which Washington has seen in years.

"We do not believe we crippled the House or the operation of the Government by abolishing a place in the House organization which had been held for years by a 16-year-old girl who never came to the Capitol. We do not believe we crippled the operation of this House by abolishing the positions of a couple of telegraph operators who had not put their hands to an instrument in years. We do not believe we crippled this House by abolishing about 20 policemen who never could be found around the Capitol, or by abolishing places supposed to be held by men downstairs and carried on the pay rolls, drawing $900 to $1,000 per year, who were working at the same time in real estate offices in the city of Washington. We have simply made the operation of this House honest.

"I simply desire to add," Mr. Palmer continued, when the Democratic applause subsided, "that we propose to make the same rule of honesty apply in every executive branch of the Government. If petty graft of the kind we have seen here in the interests of constituents who are put upon the pay rolls to do no work, but to get money to pay political debts of members, can flourish under the very eyes of men who are close to the people as Representatives elected every two years, what can you expect in departments where officers are not so closely responsible to the people? We believe that investigations now proceeding will show the same proportion of extravagance and dishonesty in the operation of the other departments of the Government, and if we can cut down the expenditures of the various departments in the same proportion as we have economized here, we will make a record for economy in the public expense to which we can point with pride."

"Popping the Question"

The Richard Street window of Mrs. Lyon's Little Antique Shop is filled with pictures of the boys and girls of long ago. The lads and lassies in the days of Henry Clay wore costumes that make us smile today. "Popping the Question" is one of the best pictures in the window. The young wooer of 1840 is telling his sweetheart that he loves her and wants her for his wife.

August

Again the days of August heat. And earth with harvest joys replete in time of mellowing fullness brief, Rejoice in ripened, garnered sheaf. Ere yet the yellow leaf and sear Proclaims again the dying year, Ere Winter's icy touch shall sever Fruition rich of Spring's endeavor. Thy lesson learn from Nature's art. Be constant still, O weary heart! Lest later journeys longing gaze Turn backward to mid-summer days! The insect hosts, a myriad throng, Rejoice in Summer's dying song. Their message echo, hear them tell Immortal Summer—fare thee well! —E. C. D.

And What It Brought

"Mother," said Edith Maynard, a girl of sixteen and just entering the age of romance, "I wish you would tell me a love story. Tell me one that really happened."

"Very well, dear, I know one that happened right in the family. I'll tell you about it. One summer day a little girl—we'll call her Emma, though that wasn't her real name—was about to go to the store of the village in which she lived to buy a dress. Her birthday was soon to come round, and her father had given her a five dollar gold piece to buy the dress for her birthday present. The day was hot, and she took care to keep under the shade of the trees that lined the road. Presently she came upon a boy—he looked to be about fifteen—lying asleep in the grass under one of the trees.

"Emma stopped to look at him. He was a handsome lad, slender and tall for his age, with a profusion of black curly hair tumbled over his forehead. His shirt was open at the neck, exposing his throat. His whole figure was relaxed as only can occur in slumber.

"But even in sleep his face was troubled. His clothes had evidently been good when new, but they were now shabby. Emma wondered who he was and what troubled him. There is something very winning about a sleeper. Perhaps it is that relaxation I have spoken of—that nonresistance which is so endearing in innocent children. At any rate, Emma, as she stood looking down at him, took him right into her heart.

"She would like to do something for him to take that troubled look off his face and replace it with a smile. It occurred to her to drop her gold piece into his flattened straw hat that lay beside him, then stand off and watch his expression when he awoke and saw it lying there shining in the sunlight flickering through the trees. But if she did this she must go without her dress. She involuntarily clutched the half eagle in a tighter grip. Again she pictured the boy awakening and his pleasure at seeing the coin in his hat. And thus she wavered till her sympathy and the pleasure of giving pleasure triumphed, and she dropped her gold piece into the hat. Then she climbed the fence beside the road and hid in some tall wheat which was nearly ready to be harvested.

"She waited nearly half an hour, not daring to take her eyes off the boy for an instant, fearing she would miss that first look of surprise she was giving treasure to see. At last he stretched himself, rubbed his eyes with his fists and sat up. He seemed to be trying to nerve himself to get up and go on, but was too tired to do so. Presently, with a sigh, he reached for his hat and saw the half eagle.

"It is questionable which would have been more delightful to a third person, the look of surprise of the boy or the expression of the little girl hidden in the wheat, clasping her hands over her breast as if to still the beating of her little heart, her eyes beaming with pleasure and expectancy.

"His eyes were fixed on the coin for a moment, then he began to look about him for the donor. Emma enjoyed it all immensely for awhile, then she began to think about what she should do. Would she make herself known or remain in hiding and let the boy go away with her treasure without knowing who had given it to him? If she took the former course he would return the gold piece. If she took the latter she would have given away her birthday present to one who could not even know her as the giver of it.

"But Emma was not a girl to get this far in doing a kindness and turn back. She kept very still, watching the boy, and it seemed as if she could read his thoughts. She fancied him saying, holding the coin in his hand and looking at it, 'I'm going to invest this money and work and save and make a fortune out of it.' Then, standing on his feet after looking all about him, he put the coin in his pocket and reluctantly went on.

"A great many years passed."

"How many years, mother?"

"Let me see. Emma had grown to be twenty-five years old, and she was about twelve when she gave away her birthday present. That means thirteen years.

"One day she heard that a man had offered to build a social clubhouse and give it to the town. The reason he offered it was that when a poor boy on his way to the city to look for a situation he had gone to sleep on the outskirts of the village and some one had dropped a five dollar gold piece into his hat. He had made lucky investments with the money, and it had grown from $5 to $20,000. But more than this, it had given him hope and courage, and he had succeeded in other directions. He wished to return the gift with interest, and, not knowing the donor, would give it to the town.

"Well, Emma met this man and became very much interested in him and he in her. One day when they were together—

"I know the end of the story," interrupted Edith. "He was the boy to whom Emma had given the half eagle."

"That isn't all there is to it," replied the mother.

"What else is there?"

"He was father and I am Emma."

A STEP BACKWARD

By WILLIS BEACH POTTER

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

A young clergyman fresh from a theological seminary entered a gambling den in Dead Man's Gulch and, standing in the center of the room, said in a sonorous voice:

"You are invited to attend a prayer meeting in Tompson's wood to commence at 5 o'clock. It is now a quarter to 4. I trust that every man present will be there."

Instead of every man showing a willingness to go to Tompson's wood every man proceeded with what he was doing, which was principally gambling.

The young clergyman—he might have been twenty-seven or twenty-eight years old—looked mildly upon this want of response, not in the least discouraged, and was about to leave the saloon when his attention was attracted to a young girl who came in, approached a table where half a dozen men were playing poker, and, putting her arms around the neck of one of the players, begged him to leave.

"Do come home, father," she said. "Mother is sick and your being here worries her."

"After I've played a few hands more, Effie. I've had a long run of bad luck, which is sure to turn."

The clergyman from the moment the girl entered was visibly affected by her presence. Going to the table, he looked over the game for awhile, then said to her father, "If you go home I'll see what I can do to recover your losses." Every one looked up at the speaker surprised, especially the man addressed. He rose, leaving seven or eight dollars on the table, and, telling his daughter to go home and say to her mother that he would be there soon, stood looking over the game.

His fellow gamblers were five stool pigeons and one card sharp. They had fleeced the man who had given up his place out of nearly all the money he possessed. The clergyman steadily won, but in small amounts, till he had increased the pile before him to several hundred dollars. Then the card sharp gave his stool pigeons a look and opened the next hand for a jack pot. All stayed in for one round, then dropped out on the second, and on the third the betting was left to the card sharp and the clergyman, who continued to raise each other till the pot resembled a miniature mountain.

By this time there were a number of lookers on, and the excitement waxed high. A clergyman playing against Dave Simpson, who was known for the slickest card sharp at Dead Man's Gulch, was an interesting sight to see. When the two men tired of raising each other Simpson "called" the clergyman. This by the rules of the game compelled the latter to show his hand first, an evident disadvantage to him, playing with a light fingered opponent who might increase his hand after knowing what the clergyman held.

The broad brim of the parson's clerical felt hat was pulled down over his eyes, and his cards were held close under them. Presently he said mildly: "I see four kings in my hand, and nothing will beat four kings except four aces. Since I've got an ace, too, there's no way for you to beat me except by introducing an ace from another pack, which would, to say the least, be irregular. I'm going to show my cards, and if you have that fifth ace I'd advise you to keep it dark."

The speaker seemed to be troubled by an itching at the back of his neck and put a hand up to scratch. When he withdrew his hand he held in it a knife eight inches long, which he held over his opponent. The latter retained his nerve, sitting motionless.

"You're no parson," he said. "Who are you?"

"I am a clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal church. My name is James Sykes, formerly a desperado and black-leg, but reformed."

Throwing his cards on the table, he told the man for whom he played to scoop in the pot.

Every one had heard of Jim Sykes, and not a man among the gamblers dared to tackle him. He went home with the man he had befriended and on arrival said:

"You people have forgotten me, but I haven't forgotten you. Once when a posse was after me to hang me this young lady, then a slip of a girl, hid me and saved my neck. These funds are a small token of my gratitude."

He took the girl's hand in his and looked into her eyes with his, which were full of gratitude.

"I remember," she said, "six or seven years ago a young man coming to our house and telling me that he was hunted for his life, but he could not possibly be you. He was a frightful looking object. You, on the contrary, are the personification of all that is good."

"And what made the change in me? The little girl who saved my life. I resolved that her effort should not be in vain. I determined to live for the good instead of the bad. I was converted by an evangelist and joined the Methodist church. Now I am a worker in the vineyard of the Lord."

And before he left he had secured a helpmeet to work with him in his new field. The couple worked exclusively among the roughest classes, for which labor on account of his experience with them the husband was eminently fitted. There are a number of these western towns which were once sinks of iniquity that are now reputable places, made so by our hero and heroine.

MYRA'S CHANCE

By JANE OSBORNE

Cornelia Bennett had been studying her uncle's face in the lamp light as he sat reading his evening paper exactly as he had read it six nights out of the seven ever since she could remember. Finally, as Cornelia kept her fine gray eyes intent upon his weather-worn face, he looked up.

"Why, Cornie," he asked, "why didn't you go with your aunt and Myrie to the social? You're no hand to miss an evening out."

"You see, Uncle Frank," Cornelia began, looking straight into his face. "I want to talk to you alone. It is something you will understand better than Aunt Nellie, I think."

Mr. Davis looked puzzled. "You aren't thinking of getting married?" he suggested with a lack of conviction, for the idea was quite preposterous.

Cornelia laughed. "Uncle Frank, who in the name of common sense could any one marry? There hasn't been a man in Stanton we could marry since we were children. You know there isn't any chance here. That's just what I wanted to talk to you about."

"There are several fair sort of young men," suggested Mr. Davis contemptuously. "There's Davy Little and young Ashley."

"Yes," interrupted Cornelia. "I knew you would say that, but they aren't the kind Myra could marry. They have always farmed it right here. You know, Uncle, Myra is one girl in a hundred."

"Yes—yes, you're right," mused Mr. Davis with humility as he watched the smoke from his pipe circle slowly above him. "She's most too fine for a farmer's wife."

"And she is twenty-five," added Cornelia.

"You must be going on twenty-nine," Cornelia exclaimed Mr. Davis.

Cornelia was not interested in herself. She bent intently over the table towards him.

"I've been thinking that maybe I ought to do something for Myra," she said, "to give her a chance. She doesn't seem quite happy." Cornelia took a quick breath and came out with the surprise. "Maybe I could take her away for a season where she would meet some people and have a chance."

The look of expected annoyance came over her uncle's face.

"Cornelia, my girl," he said, "I am not as rich as I would like to be. I can give you a fair sort of home here, and you more than pay me for what little it is worth, but when it comes to traveling about—a season here and a season there—it is too much."

Cornelia laid her hand affectionately on her uncle's. "Now, you listen," she said soothingly. "Myra and I have a couple of thousand dollars that father left us and I was thinking that I might take half of that and go off with Myra to a really tip-top place. She could have a few nice clothes, so she wouldn't look out of place. It would all take a lot of money, but when you think of what it might do for Myra it seems worth while."

"You mean she might marry a rich city fellow?" asked Mr. Davis.

"It might lead to it; yes."

For a few minutes the two sat in silence. Finally Mr. Davis rose and walked slowly around the room, pausing behind his niece with his strong hands on her shoulders.

"I guess you have got the right idea, Cornelia," he said, "but how are you going to tell your Aunt Nellie?"

"I've thought of that," Cornelia assured him. "We—you and I—mightn't be able to convince her, but I will let Myra think that I have set my heart on going, that it is all for my sake, and that you approve. Then she will agree, and if she wants to go Aunt Nellie will agree. You know Aunt Nellie would do anything for Myra."

Mr. Davis looked at his niece in admiration. "You've been doing some deep thinking, niece," he said, "and I guess it is all for the best."

So far Cornelia's plan had worked better than she had hoped and the task of winning over Myra and her aunt was comparatively simple. Myra, who had at best the sort of indifference and unwillingness to think for herself that went with her kind of faint prettiness, offered neither opposition nor enthusiasm. In fact, Cornelia felt a touch of disappointment that the plan she had spent so much time in working out, and which would cost so much of their small inheritance, should be met with such unaffected indifference on the part of Myra.

Things progressed rapidly. The thousand dollars was withdrawn from the savings bank where it had been resting for the past twelve years, and it was carefully apportioned—so much for clothes, so much for traveling expenses, so much for board at the hotel at the sea shore where Cornelia had decided to go, and so much for spending money. In this planning, Myra took her usual lack of interest and even when it came to getting the wonderful wardrobe, she was blissfully ignorant that Cornelia spent about a fifth as much on herself as she did on her pretty sister.

As the day for their departure drew on no one showed as much interest as did the honest Mr. Davis. Each gown of the new wardrobe had to be displayed again and again to his admiring eyes, and as the two young women drove off to the railroad station, the old man actually imagined to himself that the whole scheme had been as much his own idea as it was Cornelia's.

"Mind you get a rich, handsome chap for Myra," he had whispered in Cornelia's ear with a chuckle as she kissed him good bye.

Cornelia had laughed back to her uncle, promising to keep him informed by postscripts—which he was not to read to Aunt Nellie—as to how the scheme was progressing.

Thus ran the first postscript, following a letter filled with glowing details of the trip and the magnificence of the hotel that Cornelia had chosen for Myra's campaign.

"It is true, as we have read, that these hotels always have a great many more young women than men, so what eligible men there are, are in great demand. But Myra is quite the prettiest girl here, and as soon as she is rested from the trip I am sure she will 'chipper up' and get all the attention As I feared, it is rather unusual for two girls to be off alone at a hotel, but if I don't dance and always keep with the older women I think it won't seem strange. You know you always did say I had an oldish look for my age, and I guess it will serve me in good stead now."

The next postscript followed a letter telling of Myra's first dance:

"The sea air has done me no end of good, though I am afraid Myra hasn't got quite used to it yet. I guess she will be all right in a day or so. At the dance last night she seemed to have a good deal of attention—mostly older men though, who didn't dance. One of them, a Mr. Buxley Draper, a son of the Draper you read so much about in the paper, was with us for about an hour, and after the dance we all went down for a stroll on the boardwalk. It is very nice for me as Mrs. Draper is with him and, although she is older than Aunt Nellie, I find her very companionable. She likes Myra, too, I think, as she walked back from the ocean with her. That gave her son a chance to ask me about how long we are going to be here. It is quite clear that he is interested in Myra, even at this short acquaintance. I didn't give him any satisfaction, though, as I think it is better to keep them all guessing. I asked Myra last night after she went to bed if she liked Mr. Draper, but she was too sleepy to tell me. She couldn't very well help it though. He is about thirty and just good looking enough. I am sure you would approve of him. By the way, I wore that black evening dress with my hair parted plain the way you like it. I am sure I looked ten years older than Myra."

The next postscript followed in about a week:

"I can't think what makes, Myra home-sick. Does she say anything in her letters to Aunt Nellie about wanting to come home? Things have gone so far with Mr. Draper that I hate to leave now. He is with us all the time, and has decided to stay another week. Besides, Mrs. Draper has proposed bringing us home in their car. Just think of that! I don't believe Buxley has proposed to Myra yet, as they haven't been alone long enough. Usually the four of us are together."

Then came a letter from the uncle to Cornelia.

"Dear Niece," it ran; "the biggest surprise ever I had came last night when young Davy Little came over. He said Myra had written him every day since she had been gone, and now he says she has written and says she'll marry him after all she has been saying 'no' this five years. She never knew she liked him till now, she says. She wants him to come on to the sea shore and get her right away and take her home. Hasn't she told you, and how about young Buxley Draper? I am quite counting on him."

This was Cornelia's answer:

"It's all right about Buxley Draper. Davy Little got here this morning and we are all coming home together tomorrow in the Draper's car. Maybe there will be two weddings when we get back."

"P S We have only spent $423 out of the $1,000 and I think it has been worth it,"—Cornelia.

Boy's Remarkable Climb.

When Evey Sandalls, a sturdy five-year-old boy, went exploring alone a few days ago on the Derbyshire, England, mountains, and got lost, he caused no little worry and sensation in the village of Hayfield. Up, up, the adventurous little mountaineer climbed till he reached the top of Kinder Scout, the highest summit in the Peak district. How he climbed to such a bleak spot without injury or did not succumb to his thirty hours' exposure on the mountain side is a mystery. The summit of Kinder Scout is 2,088 feet high, and is only accessible by surmounting huge boulders and avoiding treacherous tracts of bog. His distracted father, the police and workmen searched the moors and mountain side for ten hours, eventually finding the little wanderer asleep on the edge of Kinder Falls, a cascade which tumbles down the mountain side. He was lying on some sand underneath an overhanging boulder. A false movement would have meant his death.

Industry of Education.

China is said to have established universities without providing schools where students can prepare for the universities. The business of preparing young men and women for the colleges has been developed in America to the proportions of a vast industry, and as the colleges are continually making their entrance requirements more exacting, the industry is being taxed to its capacity, qualitatively, just as ever increasing number are taxing it quantitatively.

THE BEST SHOW

in your city this week, or any week, is the display of Men's Wear at our stores.

The "ALCO SYSTEM" Clothes exhibit that we are making gives a splendid index of the really great advance in the making of men's ready-for-service suits, and it is done by the concentration of the makers' effort along the lines of building garments in their own workshops that will endure, and that also show how the care of minor details, no matter how small, make for a perfect whole.

The Summer Cottage Pony

Billy was introduced on the premises by Anna when she came to clean house. As I saw her rattling along down the wooded road in her old rickety cart drawn by a small and businesslike bay pony I did not clasp my hands to my heart with a premonition of trouble—I was too busy thrilling with joy at the prospect of turning the battle against cobwebs and dust over to her. She unhitched the pony and tied him to the back of the cart outside the fence with his nose in a bunch of hay under the seat.

The sun was shining fiercely on him a little later when I noticed him and had a surge of philanthropy.

"It's a shame!" said I. "I am going to tie him inside, in the shade, where he can eat grass. It'll save mowing it!" Billy turned a mild and truthful eye upon my approach. It was then that I saw a cherished grapevine that had been trailed over the fence at the expense of much time and several yards of twine had been eaten bare. Not a leaf remained. Early that morning it had been a mass of green.

"You imp!" I said and slapped Billy. He was tied short. To eat those leaves he must have performed an acrobatic feat that would have been well worth seeing. He did not seem in the least concerned as I jerked him inside the fence and tied him, but rubbed my shoulder with his soft nose. I hardened my heart. There are people who use exactly the same tactics as Billy and they should be disapproved of on principle.

Some time later I looked out at Billy. I never did have a head for mathematics and I had been too liberal in the length of the rope. Having eaten all the grass in a circle Billy was now with great enthusiasm and gusto enjoying a salad of my scarlet geranium bed recently set out at so much per geranium.

"Billy!" I shrieked, just as he bit off the top of the sixth geranium. He merely flicked his tail and seemed indifferently when I hauled him back. Holding his ears firmly, I glared into his countenance and told him a few things. Wriggling loose, he tried to stick his nose into my apron pocket.

"You are not in the least cute!" I insisted coldly. "I am not impressed at all, understand! I prefer beauty of character to parlor tricks and it's plain to be seen you are an abandoned and hardened case!"

Then I tied him to a small tree in the midst of an arid waste of moss, sprouting acorns and other unappetizing things, for it really seemed that by this time Billy must be entirely filled with food. Leaving him to his meditations I stalked away. It was Anna, washing windows, who saw the deed.

"That bad horse!" she commented with cheerful stolidity. "He is now eating things above!"

It was true. Twisting and stretching his neck like a serpent, Billy reached a waving tendril of the grapevines trained over a rustic arbor and hauled in several yards. He was standing on tiptoes to do it. We went out and seriously considered the matter after separating Billy from his aerial feast. The only safe place for him was on the fireplace mantel or the roof. Still, from the latter he probably would spring agilely into the treetops and devour those. If there had been an abandoned well on the place he could have been lowered into that till Anne was ready to depart. Comfortably bulging from his numerous repasts, Billy watched us with mild and liquid eyes as we debated. He whinnied beguilingly. He seemed to think he was a favorite with the family, instead of an outcast.

I got the yardstick and measured. Tied around by the corner of the house, it seemed that Billy would be rendered utterly innocuous and helpless. He could not reach the peach tree with six peaches on it, which are more to reach the young beeches to gnaw the bark and he could not touch the woodbine over the house. Under his feet was good, plain sand, on which he might gorge if he cared to, and over his head unlimited quantities of air. I tied him in vindictive triumph while he tried to rub his nose against my cheek and whinnied the depth of his affection. There was no doubt he was a social horse.

"There!" I crowed. "Now go ahead and do your worst!"

An hour later it was time to get our noonday dinner and I sought the kitchen. Hastily stepping into the pantry, I got a shock that finished me. Through the open window from outside projected Billy's head, and he was just consuming the last of the rhubarb pie that I had baked early that day and set on a chair to cool. He licked his jaws as he twinkled his eyes at me. If he could have talked he would have murmured: "You told me to!"

I am going to save up money and buy Billy. I think he would be far more interesting than a parrot or a bulldog.

Science Called to Aid Business.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson IX.—Third Quarter, For Aug. 27, 1911.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Jer. xxxix, 1-10. Memory Verses, 9, 10—Golden Text, Num. xxxii, 23—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

We have come to the end of the story of Judah for the time being, for when in captivity their history ceases during that period. Thus the 573 years of Acts xlii, 17-21, from the exodus to the building of the temple, perfectly agrees with the 480 of I Kings vi, 1, by subtracting the ninety-three years of the captivities in Judg. iii, iv, vi, xlii; so also the whole period of the present age of Israel's rejection of Christ, which comes in between the sixty-nine weeks and the seventieth week of Dan. ix, 25-27. Every believer should lay to heart that all time spent out of fellowship with Christ is time lost.

The ten tribes had been carried captive in the ninth year of their King Hoshea, which was about the sixth year of Hezekiah, king of Judah. The Lord had borne with Judah about 130 years longer, sending them prophet after prophet and giving them such good kings as Hezekiah and Josiah, but they were incorrigible. "They mocked the messengers of God and despised His words and misused His prophets until the wrath of the Lord arose against His people till there was no remedy. Therefore He brought upon them the king of the Chaldees . . . to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah" (II Chron. xxxvi, 15, 17, 21).

The account of this siege of Jerusalem, with the capture of Zedekiah and many of his people, is recorded in Jer. lii and II Kings xxv, and more fully in those two chapters than in our lesson chapter. There were at least two very strange things in connection with this siege and the capture of Zedekiah. Ezekiel was a captive in Babylon, hundreds of miles distant, and yet without telephone or telegraph or wireless he was told to note the very day the siege began and set it forth by an object lesson to the captives at Babylon (Ezek. xxiv, 1-3; Jer. lii, 4). He was told to let the captives that the king would be carried to Babylon and die there, yet he would not see Babylon (Ezek. xli, 13). This is explained by verse 7 of our lesson. The time and manner of the flight of the king and his men of war from the city, according to verse 4 of our lesson, were also seen by the prophet in Babylon and set forth before the people by an object lesson (Ezek. xli, 1-3). The capture of Zedekiah by night helps to make more real that the darkness and the light are both alike to Him with whom we have to do; that we cannot escape Him when He wants us; that it is impossible to hide from Him (Ps cxxxix, 1-12).

We think of Jonah and his capture and second commission and also of Num. xxxiii, 23, "Be sure your sin will find you out." On the other hand, consider how safe we are when God hides us. Think of Moses in a cleft of the rock with God's hand covering him, of Elijah hidden by the brook Cherith and of Zephaniah and of Jeremiah and Baruch hidden from Jehoikim! If we are true believers we may well rejoice that our life is hid with Christ in God (Col. iii, 3). From the murder of Abel to the present time and on to the time when he shall be shut up for a thousand years the devil's motto seems to be "Kill, kill!" See his dread work in verse 6 of our lesson. Yet the murder of Zedekiah's sons bears no comparison to the murder of the Son of God in the presence of Mary, His mother. These men and all others die because of their own sins. He died for the sins of the whole world.

Some were carried captive to Babylon for their good, like Daniel and his friends, Ezekiel and others, but Zedekiah and his companions were carried captive as a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse. This was shown to Jeremiah in the vision of the two baskets of figs (Jer. xlii). It is not true concerning every one that "all is for the best" but it is true concerning all who are redeemed by precious blood; that all things are for their good that they may become in their daily life more like Jesus Christ (Rom. viii).

So the city was taken and burned, and the walls were broken down and the people carried into captivity for seventy years, as the Lord had predicted by Jeremiah (chapter xxix, 10). The mountains remained as before, and it is written, "As the mountains (not the walls) are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about His people from henceforth even forever."

The captain of the guard left in the land some of the poor of the people who had nothing and gave them vineyards and fields (verse 10), reminding us of Zeph. iii, 12, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." One feature of the coming kingdom will be kings' special care of and favor to the poor and the needy (Ps. lxxii, 1-4, 12, 13).

Jeremiah was still a prisoner when the city was taken (xxviii, 28), but the captain of the guard (the chief of the executioners—margin verse 9) received orders from the king of Babylon to look well to him, do him no harm, but do whatever Jeremiah might desire (verses 11, 12; chapter xl, 2-3). Thus was fulfilled the Lord's promise to Jeremiah in chapter i, 10, "I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee."

THE DIVINE VOICE TO THE SINNER

Righteousness to Be Established on Earth by Power.

"WHERE ART THOU, ADAM?"

Pastor Russell's Address at Bible Students Convention—Lesson of Adam's Disobedience—Erected a Barrier Between the Creator and His Creatures. Mankind Pursued by God's Grace.

St. John, N. B., August 20.—Pastor Russell of Brooklyn delivered two addresses here today under the auspices of the International Bible Students Association. One of these was more particularly for the public, the other, which we report, was more for Bible Students.

The Pastor took for his text God's message to Adam, after the latter had become a transgressor in Eden, when he hid from his Maker: "Where Art Thou, Adam?" (Genesis iii. 9). The speaker said in part:

"Be sure your sin will find you out." Adam learned this lesson early in his career. Highly favored by his Maker, crowned with the glory and honor of human perfection and the lordship of earth, Adam had the offer of everlasting life, under Edenic conditions. But while condemning his disobedience we cannot help sympathizing with him when we realize that the act of disobedience which brought the Divine sentence upon Adam, and, by heredity, upon all of his race, was caused by love for his wife.

The unvarnished narrative is that Mother Eve thirsted for knowledge, and was not content to await the Almighty's time for giving them knowledge. She hearkened to the serpent's plea that the Almighty was seeking to keep herself and her husband in ignorance by forbidding them to partake of the fruit of the tree of knowledge. She had not come to know the benevolence of her Maker, and that no good thing would he withhold from His obedient creatures. She had not yet learned that the fruit of that tree was forbidden for a time only, and that the premature eating of it could bring no blessing, but Divine disfavor. The Apostle shows this when he declares that Mother Eve was deceived; but with equal positiveness he declares that Father Adam was not, himself, deceived; that he partook of the fruit knowingly, intentionally, willfully, and with a full realization of the disobedient act which brought upon him death—"The wages of sin is death;" "Thou shalt surely die" (Romans vi. 23; Genesis ii. 17).

But while Adam's act was one of chivalry—was really suicide because of love for his wife, who had transgressed—nevertheless, it was an act of disobedience. He should have had loyalty to his Creator first, above his loyalty to his wife. Indeed, we have reason to believe that Mother Eve's transgression might have been cancelled in some manner, since it was committed under deception. Father Adam's course should have been to remain loyal to God at all hazards, and to have trusted to Divine love and wisdom in respect to the results. Everywhere the Scriptures lay stress upon Adam's disobedience, which was a wilful sin against light and knowledge.

The sinners hid themselves in the Garden. The inference is that, previously, they had enjoyed fellowship and communion with their Creator, but as soon as they sinned they realized their unworthiness of Divine fellowship—sin turned them away from God. Instead of the happiness of His fellowship, they had discontent and evil forebodings of estrangement. They had lost their God, and, by virtue of their very nature, they would, in consequence, be measurably unhappy—one of the principal elements of their nature, therefore, was hunger and thirst for God, which was not gratified. A barrier had come between the Creator and His creatures.

Estranged From Birth.
The estrangement which our first parents experienced, dating from the time of their sin, is one which all mankind has inherited from them. The Prophet David speaks of this, saying that the world is estranged from birth; and, speaking of himself, declares, "I was shapen in iniquity, in sin did my mother conceive me" (Psalm li. 5). God is not to be charged with the responsibility of this estrangement. It comes to all as the result or outworking of sin. All are sinners and all feel themselves unworthy of the fellowship of their Creator, and realize themselves undeserving of His blessing. The fear which drove our first parents to hide has since then driven many still further from God into sin, not only because of heredity, but also through taking a perverse course themselves. The fear has increased, and today one of the most terrible maladies on earth is fear—fear. It is not surprising that we and the heathen, thousands of millions, fearing, dreading, not with that fear which is the beginning of wisdom, and which leads back to God, but with that fear or terror which leads them to think of Him as a great Demon, who has provided for their eternal torture.

The same principle operates in the minds of people born in civilized lands. There is a fear, a dread respecting the future, a dread which takes hold also upon things of the present life. This fear toward God, the Scriptures declare, is wrong, saying, "Their fear toward Me is taught by the precepts of men." (Isa. 29:13.) These precepts of men are represented in our various creeds, all of which claim to be the Word of the Lord, but all of which are the product of fearful, human minds.

God's Word does not uphold a single creed of Christendom, nor does a single creed of Christendom uphold God's Word. They all contain certain elements of truth, around which great masses of error have gathered. However, if only such as conscientiously believe every feature of their creeds should remain with them, and if all others were to step out, honestly and fearlessly, the creeds would be found to have very few worshippers. They are fetishes of idol worship, surely displeasing to the Lord. Let every one oppose this fear which has done so much to discredit God and His Word, and so much to turn the hearts and minds of the best people in the world away from God and the Bible.

"Where Art Thou, Sinner?"
While our first parents hid from God, and all of our race have the same disposition because of fear, God, nevertheless, has not hidden from his creatures. As He called after Adam, saying, "Where art thou?" and brought Adam forth from his hiding place, so in due time all of Adam's children will be pursued by His grace and mercy until all shall come to know of the love of God which passeth all human understanding.

We are not informed that our first parents afterward hearkened to God and repented of their disobedience. We merely know that they could not retrace their steps. "The sentence of death upon them was enforced. They were driven out of Eden—away from the life-sustaining fruits." The Divine sentence against them was, "Dying, thou shalt die." Gradually the dying process operated against the perfect man until, after nine hundred and thirty years of struggling, he succumbed—he was dead. The Divine sentence against our first parents descended to their posterity. As God said to Mother Eve, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception," so has it been with all of her daughters.

And God said to Adam, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground from whence thou wast taken." So Adam's sons also have contended with the thorns and thistles, and, in sweat of face, have labored for sustenance, gradually succumbing to the cares of human life—dust to dust returning. But as God called after the sinner in Eden, so He has called after the sinner since, but remarkably few have had the hearing ear.

Amongst those mentioned in the Bible who heard the voice of God and obtained reconciliation, we remember Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the prophets, the Apostles, etc. But the masses of mankind have not at any time been ready to hearken to God's voice. Fear has driven them further and further away from the Only Name. The question is a proper one here, How long will God call after the sinner? How long will the sinner continue to be fearful of his Creator, and continue to go further from Him? And is God calling as loudly as Divine Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power can call? If not, why not?

Why Not Call More Loudly?
God's call was greatly increased in the days of our Savior and since. Men have heard of God's love and mercy and His invitation to become reconciled to Him, but many still believe in the teachings of the Dark Ages, regarding eternal torment, which tends to drive them to fear and away from God. The Apostle declares what we, as Bible students, more and more appreciate, namely, that it is the Love of God that constrains, that makes us happy, that brings "the peace of God which passeth all understanding." On the contrary, as St. Paul declares, the doctrines of devils bring fear, tormenting dread, and cause men to hide from God. Many, unquestionably, in the past have attended church services, not because of love for God, not because of any truly worshipful spirit, but from fear, and in hope that by thus rendering some outward homage to the Name Divine they might escape torture in the future.

We are not for a moment to think of such people as hearing the Divine Voice. They are serving as are the heathen, who have never heard of the true God, in any sense of the word.

We may be inclined to wonder that our Almighty Creator has apparently pursued the human family with His voice of love and mercy and invitation to reconciliation for so long, in so peculiar a manner—effecting such a small proportion of the thousands of millions of our race. Once this greatly perplexed us all; now, through our study of the Scriptures, we are learning, dear Bible Students, why things are thus. We are learning that God is now calling merely a special class—"the elect"—those who love righteousness and hate iniquity—those who hunger and thirst after righteousness and fellowship Divine. To these God is now holding out a special invitation. His message is, "Gather together My saints unto Me—those who have made a covenant with Me by sacrifice."

Why Not a Greater Work?
Some may inquire, Why does not God do a greater work? Why does

He allow clouds and darkness to obscure His Character, and Word, and Plan? Why does He allow darkness to cover the earth and gross darkness the heathen? Why does He permit sin to be so prevalent that whosoever will live godly shall suffer persecution, shall find the way of righteousness a narrow one, a difficult one? Why does God not restrain the powers of Satan, and spread the light of the knowledge of His glory throughout the whole earth? Why does He seem to leave the entire matter in our poor, bungling, imperfect hands?

Why does He seem thus indifferent to the heathen thousands of millions and to the masses of Christendom? Ah! there is a reason, which saintly ones are gradually coming to see, and which, more and more, is causing them to rejoice, through faith. We now see plainly stated in God's Word that the class now being selected is called for a purpose—a glorious purpose—in which Adam and all of his race shall eventually have a blessing. We see that Divine grace is now selecting the Church; and that while few have been called as compared with the masses of mankind, many more are called than will eventually be chosen. The "elect" class is to be made associates with Jesus in His Messianic Kingdom, "heirs of God, joint-heirs with Jesus Christ."

So, as soon as the full number of "elect" shall have been found and shall have been tested and found worthy, the present method of Divine operation will change completely. No longer will God call after the sinner, "Where art thou?" No longer will preaching be the Divine method of pursuing sinners. On the contrary, everything pertaining to human interests will, for a thousand years, be turned over to Messiah's Kingdom. "He shall reign from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." His Kingdom will exercise force. "The Law shall go forth from Mt. Zion, and the Word of the Lord," respecting that Law, "from Jerusalem;" "and it shall come to pass that the soul who will not obey that great Prophet, Priest, King, Instructor, will be destroyed from amongst the people" (Acts iii, 19-23).

All the Blind Eyes Shall Be Opened.
To what extent the various beliefs of the heathen and the creeds of Christendom are the work of demons, Satan and his hosts, no human being can tell. We may merely surmise, on the strength of the Apostle's words, that we wrestle not with flesh and blood merely, but with invisible "principalities and powers, wicked spirits in high places." We may judge this also from the intimation that Satan has been deceiving the whole world. We remember the Apostle's declaration respecting the "doctrines of demons" (Ephesians vi. 11, 12, R. V.; I Timothy iv. 1).

When the True Light shall shine, when the Prince of Light, the King of glory, shall take to Himself His great power and reign, and the Prince of darkness shall be bound, then the light of the knowledge of the glory of God shall fill the whole earth—then the many misrepresentations of the Divine character and Divine Plan will vanish; the blind eyes shall be opened, the deaf ears shall be unstopped, and the knowledge of God's will and of His gracious Plan of Salvation will be fully made known to every creature.

As we have already seen, these blessings will begin at the time when the Elect Church shall be completed. The blessings of the Messianic Kingdom, according to the Bible, will come first to the Jews. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and all the Prophets will be the earthly Representatives of the invisible Messiah. These will be the Princes in all the earth (Psa. xiv. 16).

The Judgments of the Lord Soon.
Soon the race will be started up the Highway of Holiness, encouraged by rewards of health and strength and uplifting blessings, and stimulated by the stripes and punishments which will be visited upon evil doers in that time. Thus "The judgments of the Lord will be abroad in the earth," rewarding righteousness and promptly punishing every evil deed and word and thought. The result is clearly stated in the Scriptures—"The inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness" (Isaiah xxvi. 9).

Nevertheless, we are not to forget the explicit teaching of God's Word to the effect that at the conclusion of Messiah's reign, when sin and death shall have been fully subjected, and when all shall have been lifted up to perfection—except the wilful sinners who will be destroyed in the Second Death—even then God will not permit the perfect ones of that time to enter upon eternal conditions until first they shall have been subjected to severe trial and testing. Satan shall be loosed from his prison-house "for a little season," for this very purpose of testing the perfected world. All then living, perfect in mind and body, should be loyal to God to the very core—should be able to stand any test of loyalty. Such as yield to sin and become disobedient to God will be counted unworthy of eternal life, and will be destroyed in the Second Death, from which there will be no recovery. St. Peter tells us of such that they will die like natural, brute beasts.

In conclusion, Pastor Russell urged upon his hearers that such of them as have become Christians indeed by entire consecration to God and endeavor to do His will—such as are seeking joint-heirship with Christ in His Kingdom of glory, honor and immortality—should "lay aside every weight and every besetting sin, and run with patience the race set before them" in the Gospel. Thus they will make their "calling and election sure" and gain an abundant entrance into the everlasting Kingdom which is to bless the world (2 Peter iii. 13).

HOW MONT ALTO IS SAVING LIVES

This Case of Young Man From Huntingdon Is Typical of Hundreds of Others.

IS WELL AND WORKING

Eighteen Months at the State's Free Tuberculosis Sanatorium, With Proper Care and Observation of Rules, Gave Him Back Health and Strength.

The following news story, which was published in the Huntingdon Globe of Aug. 10, 1911, gives an excellent idea of the kind of work that is being done by the State Department of Health for Pennsylvania's tuberculous poor under the supervision of State Health Commissioner Samuel G. Dixon:

Lemuel Adams, who was employed as a coatmaker in the tailoring establishment of F. W. Baldwin in Huntingdon, left here in April, 1909, presumably in the last stages of tuberculosis. He had fallen off in weight, was as thin as a match, as pale as death, and when he left here two years and four months ago none of his friends ever expected to see him in the flesh again.

But Lem was in town on Monday, and he wasn't in a box, either. He was here in citizens' clothes, looking as brown as an Indian, and feeling as frisky as a colt. From Huntingdon Mr. Adams went to Mont Alto, Franklin county, where he entered the state institution for tubercular cases and became an obedient patient under Dr. Johnston, the man in charge.

For three months Mr. Adams occupied a bed in the hospital, where it took mighty close watching to keep body and soul together, but Mr. Adams won out, and in midsummer he was sent to the camp, where he did nothing but eat and sleep and breathe the fresh air of the South mountains. He remained there eighteen months, and was in the open all the time. Many a day he rose from his bed with the snow on his pillows and blankets, but he improved right along, and in March he was discharged.

Mr. Adams is now selling lightning rods, which gives him constant outdoor employment. He will never resume the tailoring business for fear of a recurrence of his trouble. He now eats like a wood chopper, sleeps like a baby and is as strong and robust as a youngster in his teens. For years Mr. Adams' normal weight was 132 pounds. Now it is 137. When he left Huntingdon in April, 1909, he weighed 110.

The splendid condition of our friend is remarkable. Indeed, he is a living monument to the patience and skill of the men who have charge of the state institution at Mont Alto. Dr. H. C. Frantz, of Huntingdon, sent Adams to Mont Alto, and on Monday when he gazed upon the shadow of two years ago he could scarcely believe his own eyes.

Chess-Playing Automaton.

There have been several automaton chess players, but it should not be necessary to say that they were all worked by the man behind the machine, or rather, within or under the machine. At the great fair held in the Crystal Palace, in London, in 1851, an automaton played the game beautifully; and so early as 1753 Baron Von Kempelen of Hungary invented an automaton that was the marvel and wonder of the time. Von Kempelen went all over Europe with his "Turk."

MORNING.
When the sun is rising over
The green meadow kissed with dew
And glows golden on the clover
And the apple blossoms too.

It is then old robin calls me,
And I hear his summons sweet
From the tree beside my window,
And I rise the morn to greet.

At the door the roses meet me
With their fragrance fresh with dew,
And the lilacs from the garden
Breathe a welcome round me too.

Oh, 'tis then that beauteous Nature
Wears her most entrancing smile!
And the lovely world around me
Seems like Eden free from guile.

Oh, the glory of the morning
Pure and sweet with thought sublime!
Emblem of that brighter morning
Filled with ecstasy divine.

CARING FOR THE PULLETS.

When neighbor calls "your pullets slow as 'lasses in January at layin'" and chuckles round about his "phe-noms" that beat the hand layin' at four months, let him rattle away.

Just remember, if that red splashed egg comes much before Sept. 1, that premature bonanza is bound to burst, for such pullets lay a few little eggs and then lay off their feathers to lay them on again. Early maturity is a razzle-dazzle. Fowls that lay so early are generally pushed to it. All poultry have a natural breeding season and must have a period for perfect development, and the bigger the breed the longer to properly mature. Turkey breeders are seeing this, and many now will allow only three-year gobblers and two-year hens in their breeding pens, claiming they are not developed till that age.

Pullets must have time to grow organs, build frames and cover them with flesh and feathers.

There must be constitution and stamina behind a pullet or those early eggs are a drain and she becomes dwarfed and weak.

Hence practical egg farmers try to hold back birds that show signs of precociousness, changing them from place to place and keeping them from food that stimulates the egg organs. To be a prime continuous layer a pullet must be well nourished as a chick, be provided with mineral for frame, protein for organs, muscles, feathers, enough carbohydrates for heat and energy, with plenty of greens, fresh air and water. The life a la nature makes the big, raucy, fluffy cackler. When such birds are brought from range, feed them on mixed grains in litter, and for a fine mash, moist or dry, use the following:

	Pounds.
Ground oats.....	2
Wheat bran.....	2
Cracked corn.....	2
Wheat middlings.....	13
Meat scrap.....	2
Cut clover.....	10
Charcoal.....	2
Salt.....	1/4

DON'TS.

Don't be purse proud. Pride founded on a pile of cash oft tumbles with tremendous crash.

Don't feed mangels with the idea that they have much food value. They are 91 per cent water.

Don't forget that oats and buckwheat are 9 per cent fiber and the hulls must be counted out, when measuring the ration.

Don't feed ground dry bone with the idea that it is anything but old dead time and that oyster shell is not better at half the price.

The Wheel Track to Eternity.

Time is the most important thing in human life—for what is joy after its departure?—and the most consolatory—for pain, when time has fled, is no more. Time is the wheel track in which we roll on towards eternity, which conducts us to the incomprehensible. There is a perfecting power connected with its progress, and this operates upon us the more beneficially when we duly estimate it; listen to its voice, and do not waste it, but regard it as the highest infinite good in which all finite things are resolved.—Wilhelm von Humboldt.

Magazine Next Sunday

Dear Sir:—On next Sunday, August 27, there will be given as a supplement with the Philadelphia Sunday North American the regular semi-monthly magazine, containing short stories and serials by noted writers. Ever since the publishers of The North American have been giving this magazine away to its readers, the circulation has been rapidly increasing.

This magazine has now become a regular feature on the second and fourth Sunday of each month. Those who are not regular subscribers would do well to place their order in advance with their newsdealer, so as to avoid the disappointment, which usually follows.

Yours very truly,
THE NORTH AMERICAN.
JAMES L. FARLEY,
Acting Circulation Manager.

The graduates of the Lock Haven State Normal School are everywhere filling important positions, not only in the public schools, but as County and City Superintendents, College Professors and in business affairs. A recent graduate was appointed during the last month as State Entomologist of Indiana at a handsome salary. He attributes much of his success to the careful training in science that he received at Lock Haven. Other students can do likewise. During the last two years the school has been filled to its capacity, and in the future the number of students will be limited in order that they may all receive individual attention. Its object is to develop home life and to advance its young men and women morally and intellectually. Write for its handsome catalog.

FUNERAL TORTURE.

Ways of the Wives When a Bororo Indian Dies.

On the death of a Bororo Indian the wife tears out handfuls of her hair and throws it on his corpse, says a writer in the July Wide World Magazine. At intervals during the first day after his death she shakes him, as though wishing to bring him back to life, and kisses his cold brow. Her efforts being in vain, she retires and the Baire approaches. He proclaims that the man has died for the sins he committed during his life. Then the relatives paint his body with "urucu," an ointment made out of the root of a wild tropical plant. Gorgeous feathers of the most varied hues are then strewn over him, and the corpse is wrapped up in a matting of straw. The moment before the burial the wives approach one after the other and cover his feet with the blood dropping from the wounds and gashes they have inflicted on their backs and arms. This ceremony is followed by another. Three Indians appear dressed in the clothes—if the few rags they wear can be called thus—of the dead man and begin singing and dancing. In the meantime the corpse is carried to the "Buhyto," a huge mound in the center of the colony, and should the dancing and singing Indians become tired before it is reached three others take their places. The body lies on the mound three days. Then the Baire goes to the mound and, seating himself at the foot of the dead man, is supposed to receive his soul in keeping.

THE BRAIN IN SLEEP.

Changes in the Volume of Blood Circulation When We Dream.

Dreams are due to an increase of sensation and circulation over that which exists in profound sleep. Observations made upon patients with cranial defects show that when we are dreaming the brain is greater in volume than in deep sleep and less than when we are awake. Thus, this intermediate volume of blood would indicate that dreams are an intermediate stage between unconsciousness and wakefulness, and their incomplete and irregular intelligence would indicate the same thing. This increased circulation is usually due to sensory stimulation affecting the vasomotor center and causing a return of blood to the head, with resultant increased consciousness.

Contrary to popular belief, dreams in themselves do not contribute to light or broken sleep in which they are present. Such a condition is due to the ever present stimuli, which according to their strength or the degree of irritability of the cells, maintain even in sleep a varying degree of consciousness of which the dreams are merely a manifestation. Therefore the fatiguing effect often attributed to dreams is not due to them, but to the lighter degree of sleep and, less complete, cell restoration which they accompany and which are due to some irritation.—Atlantic.

A Painful Mistake.

Bitter experience is a wonderful teacher. No doubt the young lady of whom London Ideas tells had, often been told that she ought to wear glasses, but had neglected or refused to do so.

There was a most determined look in her eye, however, as she marched into the optician's shop.

"I want a pair of glasses immediately," she said, "good, strong ones. I won't be without them for another day."

"Good, strong ones?"

"Yes, please." I was out in the country yesterday, and I made a very painful blunder, which I have no wish to repeat.

"Indeed! Mistook an entire stranger for an old friend, perhaps?"

"No, nothing of the sort. I mistook a bumblebee for a blackberry."

Life in Persian Oases.

Dr. Sven Bedin, describing his overland journey to India across the Persian desert, gives a graphic account of the oases where his party occasionally camped under palm trees. There the singing birds, which twitter during the day are silent at night, but the "song of the desert" is continued during the hours of darkness by the melancholy serenade of the jackals. These oases are infested by three objectionable and dangerous inhabitants—a deadly snake, black and white scorpions and a poisonous tarantula spider, which, although it lives out in the desert, is attracted to the oases by the light of the campfires.

Her Self Sacrifice.

"She's awfully self-sacrificing."

"How do you make that out?"

"Well, she stayed at home from church Sunday to sit up with a sick woman."

"But! She isn't a regular churchgoer. I don't see anything self-sacrificing in that."

"You don't? But, my dear, she had a new gown and a new hat that had just arrived Saturday night."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Real Ingratitude.

"Republicans are ungrateful," said the ready-made philosopher.

"Perhaps," replied Mr. Chuggins, "but if you want a taste of real ingratitude take a party of friends out for an automobile ride and listen to their sarcastic remarks if you happen to break down."—Washington Star.

At the Literary Club.

"Marilyn, what was done at the meeting of your literary club last night?"

"We fined Mrs. Chilton-Kearney $5 for accusing Mrs. Elphimus of cheating at bridge."—Chicago Tribune.
